District Attorney Lynne Abraham and prosecutors from the D.A.'s office welcome 60 prospective prosecutors to the District Attorney's Sixth Annual Minority Recruitment Reception as part of the D.A.'s ongoing commitment to diversity in the district attorney's office. The 60 prospective prosecutors are current law students from the region's law schools.

The annual reception is one component of the district attorney's continuing commitment to excellence and diversity in the Philadelphia District Attorney's Office.

"As the CEO of the city's largest law firm, I am proud that our office is the most diverse law office in the city," said D.A. Lynne Abraham.

Students from Temple, the University of Pennsylvania, Widener University and Rutgers will attend this year's reception.

"We offer a great opportunity for young lawyers to gain immediate courtroom experience that is unmatched anywhere in the legal profession," said D.A. Lynne Abraham. "I am committed to hiring the best and the brightest men and women from as diverse a group as possible."
