December 29, 2006---District Attorney Lynne Abraham, the Philadelphia Police Department and Joe Jaskolka, remind people that shooting guns on New Years Eve is not only dangerous, it is illegal.

“People who shoot guns off into the air to ‘celebrate’ New Years Eve will be arrested and prosecuted to the fullest extent of the law, said District Attorney Lynne Abraham and Chief Inspector Anthony DiLacqua. “There will be zero tolerance for people shooting firearms into the air in so-called celebration of New Years Eve.”

On December 31, 1998, a so-called ‘celebratory’ bullet struck then 11-year-old Joe Jaskolka in the head as he walked along Fernon Street near Second Street in South Philadelphia. The bullet remains lodged in Joe’s head, and Joe wants people to see his X-Ray.

“This X-Ray shows what happened to me,” said Joe Jaskolka. “I don’t want this to happen to anybody else.”

Joe uses a wheelchair now and has endured more than 20 surgeries. The most recent surgery was two weeks ago to further align his vision. Despite all of the surgeries and challenges, Joe is now a freshman at Delaware Technical and Community College and plans to transfer to Penn State. His goal is to become a doctor to specialize in sports medicine.

“Joe never gives up,” said Joe’s parents, Greg and Brenda.

Since 1998, Philadelphia Police have arrested more than 150 people for New Years Eve weapons violations. Despite an aggressive investigation by Philadelphia Police, the shooter in Joe’s case has not yet been found, and the case remains open.

“We do not look at this practice as ‘people just having a good time,’ ” said District Attorney Lynne Abraham and Chief Inspector Anthony DiLacqua. “This is criminal behavior that puts innocent people like Joe in the line of fire.”

“The protection of our citizens and children remains our number one priority,” said District Attorney Lynne Abraham, “and we will prosecute those arrested to the fullest extent of the law.”
