Integrity Week: Panel Discussion

Moving from the "Corrupt and Contented" Label to a Model for Ethics Reform

This panel discussion will explore the City's progress toward achieving many ethics reforms, including campaign finance and lobbying, and where the City must go next to become a model for ethical and transparent government operations. Panelists will discuss if the City, once described by Lincoln Steffens in 1903 as "corrupt and contented," can become a standard-bearer for ethics reform in the state and nation.

The panel is open to the public and will be moderated by the Chief Integrity Officer for the City of Philadelphia, Hope Caldwell. It will include Q&A with the following distinguished group of panelists.
