Team	Like	Dislike
Amaze Design	Has entry	Looks like a Veteran's memorial; arch doesn't inform what was there
Davis Buckley	Invites you into space; glass info panels	Just a plan of house in brick
EwingCole	--	Too much everything; where to enter? Overwhelming
Howard+Revis	Like sculptures with plan in pavement. I can imagine house and structure	No starting entry – sell me story start to finish
Kelly/Maiello	Like structure with plan, but too much structure	How's it going to tell me stories?

Additional comments: Combine architecture (less of it) of Kelly/Maiello, with sculptures of Howard+Revis. Give me starting point of info – direct me through experience, end at Liberty Bell Center entrance.

Kelly/Maiello	Closest to seeming historically designed

Additional comments: I don't think any of them are historical enough. The structures are too modern. If our city is celebrated due to our history and historical contributions, the designs should reflect that – should use materials and designs from the period – feel like you are entering the president's house – and if you were a slave at the time – reflect their isolation and separation as well.

What features do you particularly like or dislike about each model?

Team	Like	Dislike
Amaze Design	Like the chairs, memorial, outline of building, exhibitry	Reflecting pool will freeze in winter; don't like obstruction of Bell Center
Davis Buckley	Not much (like the bronze statues)	Too simplistic; glass turns color, easily vandalized; overly emphasizes slavery aspect
EwingCole	Not much	Too much going on; with sound, tends to malfunction and becomes dated; too busy
Howard+Revis	Simple but tasteful and covers all aspects; love the sculptures and trees	Not much! (smile)
Kelly/Maiello	Like the brick depiction of the fireplaces, sides of buildings	Too much glass, technology – prone to breaking; voices of audio become dated; too busy

Additional comments: I believe the Howard+Revis design best adheres to the core design requirements. It tastefully depicts all aspects of the President's House as well as is composed of materials that will last over time, as evidenced by similar memorials (particularly in Washington, D.C.). The simplicity and beauty of this design make it, in my mind, the best.

What features do you particularly like or dislike about each model?

Team	Like	Dislike
Amaze Design		Disrespectful to both historical house and present pavilion
Davis Buckley	The most deferential to context	Appears to be an historically inaccurate position of house plan. Has house plan been scaled?
EwingCole		Confused "mess" of lightweight structures. Dis-orienting. Representation of sound in exhibit frame is goofy
Howard+Revis	Powerful – but defers to context. Everything depends on quality of sculpture
Kelly/Maiello	The best solution – architecturally strong and accurate yet respectful of context. Uses modern technology and traditional methods

Additional comments: The Kelly/Maiello scheme is the best – it balances many actors to create an exciting and new experience that will add to the visitor's experience and memories. The stair is great and adds a major 3D experience that is otherwise lacking. The incorporation of LED screens will be attractive to the visitors who may be waiting and will also permit curators to add new knowledge in the future. It also provides the best night-time "drive-by" experience. The rendering also shows clearly that, while this is a substantial intervention – it still allows other routes of access to the Liberty Bell Pavilion.

What features do you particularly like or dislike about each model?

Team	Like	Dislike
Amaze Design		I really don't see anything outstanding about it.
Davis Buckley	The wall with the names and statues
EwingCole	I love the interactive aspects and design. A 21 st Century teaching tool
Howard+Revis	I love the sculpture and the floor plan.
Kelly/Maiello	I love the color scheme and layout of the grounds

Additional comments: In a perfect world, aspects of several of the designs would be awesome. The wall and statues of the Buckley design with the interactive elements from the EwingCole design would be outstanding. The floor plan of the old mansion of the Buckley and Revis designs are very informative and noteworthy. The sculpture from the Revis design is a must and the open white flow of the Kelly design is very freeing. The Cole design is my first choice because it educates a generation that does not read.

Additional comments: I'm furious with the negativity of these designs. We must also show the positive examples set by John and Abigail Adams. We have no national memorial to them, and this would be a good spot for it.

EwingCole		Too busy, not very inviting
Howard+Revis		Could've been more
Kelly/Maiello	Very well done, very inviting

Additional comments: This is a great idea and a story that should be told. However, the whole story needs to be told. As portrayed, George Washington is highlighted as a slave owner – invoking almost outrage at the Father of our Country. But as referenced in “His Excellency George Washington,” by Joseph Ellis, Washington understood the dichotomy of freedom and slavery in the new nation. He also realized that tackling another large issue, slavery, would have been too much for the fledgling nation to handle. The nation was still wavering between being a republic and a democracy. Washington wanted or was more focused on stabilizing and building the foundation of the new nation. And he knowingly left the slavery issue to his successors, hopefully, to address in a more stable time. We should fully portray Washington as the intelligent, forward thinking man that he was.

Additional comments: My favorite is the Davis Buckley for a sense of dignity and history told. However, given the tourist experience, the Ewing Cole may be more appealing to all ages and a diverse population. Ironically, the voices CD was not turned on today and the guards aren't allowed to touch it. Maybe my favorite, Davis Buckley, is the best after all! No slip ups!

What features do you particularly like or dislike about each model?

Team	Like	Dislike
Amaze Design	Many powerful elements. Would not be a nice streetscape.	Too many aspects. The architecture is boring. The tower is too tall.
Davis Buckley	I like the simplicity. Ties in well to exg.	The house plan is small.
EwingCole	Greenery	Too busy. Will detract from the existing. Does not tie in well
Howard+Revis	Nothing	Too simple. Elements are too literal. Not lively.
Kelly/Maiello	I like the extrusion of the house, although literal. Nice streetscape.	Slavery isn't emphasized as much as others.

Additional comments: Davis Buckley is the most powerful in its simplicity, although it's a shame that the house plan was reduced. Kelly/Maiello has the best representation of the house, allowing visitors to understand the size of the rooms and the relationship of the slave quarters to the main house. Ewing Cole is too busy and would create a confusing composition. Howard+Revis is not designed at all – just a bunch of sculptures.

Howard+Revis		Very bland. No design cohesion
Kelly/Maiello	Establish what design is all about

Additional comments: Hopefully, the winner will allow for more interaction within the design. More written information needed on-site. Philadelphia needs to find a way to make this a sort of "destination," not just a side attraction. It was the President's House after all.

What features do you particularly like or dislike about each model?

Team	Like	Dislike
Amaze Design	I like the separation and ideas behind the design	There is no mention of Washington or Adams and the movie idea, while good, will not work here
Davis Buckley	I like the archway with the slave census	I dislike the lack of anything on J. Adams and the negative portrayal of G. Washington
EwingCole	The visual and audio stimuli is a nice idea	I dislike the lack of anything on J. Adams and the negative portrayal of G. Washington
Howard+Revis	I like a lot of it – the more mention of Washington and the function of the house as the executive mansion	Lack of, again, John Adams and his record and the large sculpture is out of place
Kelly/Maiello	The set up is much better – a better balance in a slave memorial and President's exhibit	The LED screens pose a problem

Additional comments: The design imposes itself on the Liberty Bell Center. It is prone to be confusing. It again has little to do with the President and is just too overwhelming.

What features do you particularly like or dislike about each model?

Team	Like	Dislike
Amaze Design		Too bold; downplays building beyond
Davis Buckley
EwingCole		Too urban of a feel
Howard+Revis	Pays most respect to issue of slavery
Kelly/Maiello	Easiest to read and understand the house

Additional comments: It would have been nice to see more local architects be involved. For such a sensitive local issue, it's sad to see so many out of state architects.

What features do you particularly like or dislike about each model?

Team	Like	Dislike
Amaze Design	The liberty memorial	I don't think enough of the history is provided.
Davis Buckley	I like everything about the design, especially the history. I LOVE IT.	Clarity is needed with the numbers. Visitors need to know that the numbers reflect the enslaved.
EwingCole	I like the idea of the voices.	The design appears to be more of a maze.
Howard+Revis	I love this because of the bronze sculpture.	More history needed
Kelly/Maiello	I like the design.	I want more documented history.

Additional comments: Re Davis Buckley: Just an important point re: Massachusetts that has a "0" (zero) for the number of enslaved Africans – Massachusetts was the first (1641) colony to legally enslave African people. This or the list of the colonies that legalized enslavement must be added ... Please.

What features do you particularly like or dislike about each model?

Team	Like	Dislike
"Amaze" Design		"Amateur" design
Davis Buckley		Simplistic
EwingCole		Busy, confusing
Howard+Revis	Like the simplicity; maybe too simple. Some potential for honest, balanced telling if whole story.
Kelly/Maiello	Same as above; combine best of these two	Overly complex; chimney under porch awkward

Additional comments: The failure of the US National Park Service to address the President's House in its "general management plan" of the 1990s allowed radical interest groups, tenured new left academics, and extreme "political correctness" to drive this issue. The words "enslaved, slavery, bondage" are used more than a dozen times in the Core Design Requirements; "Washington" twice; and John Adams, Abigail Adams, and Martha Washington not at all. Washington's plan to sell Mt. Vernon to English farmers and free his slaves to be hired as free labor is not included anywhere, nor is his will's emancipation and pensions. The effects of his plans to industrialize the U.S. are not mentioned. And ___ is false: Slavery in the President's House was not "forgotten." This is generally emotionalism and inadequate story telling.
