- IS IOT (INTERNET OF THINGS) THE END OF PRIVACY AS WE KNOW IT? (2S)

Everywhere we go, smart devices are collecting data about us, but many of us don't even know it. As consumers and employees learn about such collection and use, they express concern that private things are no longer private. People want to know what is being collected, how it is being used, and what rights they might have as data subjects. With every technological advance, and adverse media attention, come more questions for businesses and the lawyers who advise them. Should privacy be embedded into every IoT device? What role can layered privacy policies play? What can we learn from the NIST Privacy Framework and the FTC in managing privacy IoT risks? Is self-regulation sufficient, or is government regulation needed? Is privacy dead in a 24/7 connected world, or are reports of its death greatly exaggerated?

Speakers:

Mark McCreary, Chief Privacy Officer, Law Firm of Fox Rothschild

Devin J. Chwastyk, Esq., Chair of the Privacy & Data Security Group of McNees Wallace Nurick, LLC

- HACKING ELECTIONS: ELECTION SECURITY, CYBER THREATS AND THE WAY FORWARD (2S)

From information warfare to hacking, U.S. adversaries have interfered with U.S. elections. Who are the adversaries? What are the vulnerabilities these adversaries seek to exploit and what disruption or damage could they cause? Have sufficient improvements been made and actions been taken in the U.S. to minimize these threats? What are the barriers to a more effective response? This program will explore the new voting system for the City of Philadelphia, the pros and cons to compulsory voting registration, the threats and actions of U.S. adversaries against U.S. elections, current U.S. readiness, and what additional steps should be taken to address an issue in which we all have a stake.

Speakers:

Lisa M. Deeley, Chairwoman of the Office of the Philadelphia City Commissioners
Jonathan M. Marks, Deputy Secretary for Elections and Commissions
Andrew Daniller, Ph.D., George Gerbner Postdoctoral Fellow, Annenberg School for Communication, University of Pennsylvania
