

E. SLAVERY ERA DISCLOSURE

a. Slavery Era Disclosure and Financial Reparations:

Per Bill 030022, passed by City Council on April 3, 2003, and signed by the Mayor on April 24, 2003:

“Each depository shall also certify compliance with Section 17-104 of the Philadelphia Code and provide the City with a long-term strategic plan to address disparities in its lending and investment activities by January 1 of each year. 17-104 are the prerequisites to the Execution and Validity of City Contracts for Slavery Era Business/Corporate Insurance Disclosure and Financial Reparations. If it has disclosed, pursuant to this subsection, slavery policies it, or its predecessor, has sold or profits from slavery it, or its predecessor, has received, provide the City with a statement of financial reparations.

The reparations statement shall include a description of any new financial products or programs developed by the depository to address racial disparity in its lending and investment activities.”

The disclosure required is an affidavit of a search of all records of the company or any predecessor company regarding records of investments or profits from slavery or slaveholder insurance policies during the slavery era. The names of any slaves or slaveholders described in those records must be disclosed in the affidavit, (including reference information that may be accessible on an internet accessible World Wide Web home page of the Institution).

- i. Attach the financial institution’s research of Slavery Era Disclosure. Label this Appendix III.
- ii. Attach the financial institution’s affidavit of Slavery Era Disclosure issued to the City of Philadelphia Procurement Department in accordance with Philadelphia City Code Chapter 17-104. Label this Appendix IV.

APPENDIX III SLAVERY ERA BUSINESS SUMMARY

After years of research, Wells Fargo has found no records in its possession that indicate it – or any entities it acquired before the Wachovia merger or in the years following that merger – had ever financed slavery, held enslaved persons as collateral, owned enslaved persons, or profited from slavery.

With the Wachovia merger in 2008, Wells Fargo inherited hundreds of Wachovia’s predecessor institutions, including two that had involvement in slavery. Wachovia had announced these findings in 2005, apologized for the role its predecessors played and renewed its commitment to preserve and promote the history of the African-American experience in our nation. Wells Fargo shares that commitment and affirms its long-standing opposition to slavery.

The following narrative summarizes the results of the research that has been performed regarding Wachovia Bank and its ties to slavery.

SUMMARY OF RESEARCH

Wachovia commissioned external research in 2005, which revealed that two predecessor institutions, the Georgia Railroad and Banking Company and the Bank of Charleston, owned enslaved persons. Due to incomplete records, researchers cannot determine exactly how many enslaved persons either the Georgia Railroad and Banking Company or the Bank of Charleston owned. Through specific transactional records, researchers determined that the Georgia Railroad and Banking Company owned at least 162 enslaved persons, and the Bank of Charleston accepted at least 529 enslaved persons as collateral on mortgaged properties or loans and acquired an undetermined number of these individuals when customers defaulted on their loans.

The Georgia Railroad and Banking Company was founded in 1833 to complete a railroad line between the City of Augusta and the interior of the State of Georgia. The company relied on the labor of enslaved persons for the construction and maintenance of this railway. According to the existing and searchable bank records, 162 enslaved persons were owned or authorized to be purchased by the Georgia Railroad and Banking Company between 1836 and 1842. In addition, the company awarded work to contractors who purchased at least 400 enslaved persons to perform work on the railways.

The Bank of Charleston, founded in 1834, issued loans and mortgages where enslaved persons were used as collateral. A review of the bank’s account ledgers revealed a minimum of 24 transactions involving reference to 529 enslaved persons being used as collateral. In most cases, the loan was paid on schedule, and the bank never took possession of enslaved persons that were pledged as collateral on the loan. In several documented instances, however, customers defaulted on their loans and the Bank of Charleston took actual possession of enslaved persons. The total number of enslaved persons of whom the bank took possession cannot be accurately tallied due to the lack of records.

The records of the remaining Wachovia predecessors did not evidence that such companies financed slavery, held enslaved persons as collateral, owned enslaved persons, or profited from slavery. However, eleven of such predecessor companies (in addition to the Georgia Railroad and Banking Company and the Bank of Charleston) were determined to have profited indirectly from slavery through the following means:

- Founders, directors, or account holders who owned enslaved persons and/or profited directly from slavery;
- Investing in the bonds of slave states and municipalities; and
- Investing in U.S. government bonds during years when the United States permitted and profited from the labor of enslaved persons through taxation.

These institutions¹ are:

- Bank of North America (Philadelphia, Pa.)
- Bank of Baltimore
- The Philadelphia Bank (later Philadelphia National Bank)
- Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank of Philadelphia
- Pennsylvania Company for Insurances on Lives and the Granting of Annuities
- State Bank of Elizabeth (Elizabeth, N.J.)
- State Bank of Newark (Newark, N.J.)
- Savings Bank of Baltimore
- Girard National Bank
- The Trenton Banking Company
- Atlanta National Bank (Georgia)

¹ A prior version of this summary included Carswell Insurance Group. Based upon further research, we have not identified any records of this predecessor company's direct or indirect profits from slavery.

APPENDIX IV

Affidavit of Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. Submitted pursuant to Philadelphia Code Section 17.104(2)(b)

I, Gloria J. Daudier, am an authorized representative of Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. (“Wells Fargo”). I hereby certify that Wells Fargo and its predecessor institution, Wachovia Corporation, have searched, or caused to be searched, any and all records of each company, or any predecessor company, regarding records of investments or profits from slavery or slaveholder insurance policies during the slavery era. The results of this research are summarized in the attached Slavery Era Business Summary. In addition, a copy of the 2005 research report is attached.

INSTITUTIONAL REPORTS

Bank of North America (Philadelphia)

Established: 1781

CONCLUSIONS

Two of the three founders of the Bank of North America, Robert Morris (the bank's first president) and Thomas Willing, amassed at least part of their personal fortunes from the slave trade. In 1781, they formed Willing & Morris, a Philadelphia-based merchant business that dealt significantly in slave shipments and trading. Both Willing and Morris used their profits from the slave trade to fund the establishment of the Bank of North America.

Of the Bank of North America's stock holders, one man, Edward Burd, is reported to have owned at least four slaves (Nagle 2005). Another seven stock holders' names appear on a list of 1791 Pennsylvania slave owners (Nash 1973). In addition, at least 186 bank account holders' names appear on that same 1791 list. Although the names appear on both lists, and the bank was based in Philadelphia, there is no way to verify that the individuals were the same.

Records detailing the mortgage and debt payments were not located. Such records are the types of records that, in the cases of Georgia Railroad Company and Bank of Charleston below, yielded conclusive evidence of those institutions' direct profits from slavery and ownership of slaves.

Unviewed Materials

In the time available, researchers were only able to search 20 linear feet of material at the Historical Society of Pennsylvania, leaving approximately 130 linear feet of account ledgers unviewed. The process of viewing the ledgers is extremely slow and exacting (approximately 1 per 60-90 minutes), while there are many constraints at the Historical Society, such as a maximum availability of 25 working hours per week and limits on the amount of materials that can be "pulled" per request. The research team judged it more prudent to gather its findings and compile the substantial amounts of completed research in order to meet the April 15 deadline, and that the unviewed account ledgers (which provide only names and the dates of the ledgers' creation) would largely add to the list of unverifiable names and not add substantively to the concrete findings of this report.

DETAILS

Founders Who Owned Slaves and Profited From Slavery

According to the Bank of North America's record collection finding aid (located at the Historical Society of Pennsylvania; HSP):

"The Willing and Morris papers—10 documents, April 12, 1774 – July 22, 1777, containing copies of 16 letters written by Willing and Morris to Alexander Henderson, Oliver Pollock, Phillip Francis, and James Willing. Willing and Morris were sending young Henderson to manage a new 1500 acre indigo plantation on the Mississippi River. He was to go via Jamaic [sic] to pick up 40 negro slaves, stop at Pensacola with them to claim the headrights, then proceed to the plantation” (Bank of North America Collection 1780-1923; Finding Aid Description of the Willing and Morris papers, 1774-1777, Section 12 – Documents; p. 121).

Unfortunately, the repository staff reported that they were unable to locate any of the 10 documents. There is also an account by Robert Morris himself concerning his business investments and slavery. In it, he states:

“Thomas Willing, Esq, and myself, before the Revolutionary War with Great Britain, purchased and settled an Indigo Plantation, called Orange Grove, at Baton Rouge, on the borders of the river Mississippi, consisting of 3000 acres of land, on which we erected Buildings, placed an overseer with a number of Negroes, & c. But being obliged to abandon this settlement during that War, and upon the peace, it having fallen within the Spanish Dominions. We have never claimed the Land or Buildings. Upon apprehending danger at Orange Grove, we purchased a tract of land on the Spanish side of the River, to which the Overseer took the Negroes and movables, which were afterwards sold. This land remains, not having been sold by us. I think it cost us only 250 dollars” (Morris 1839, pp.19-20).

Finally, there is this quote from the Pennsylvania Gazette:

“Another prominent Philadelphia mercantile firm which dealt in slaves was Willing, Morris and Company, whose advertisement appears below:

‘Just imported from the Coast of Africa, in the Brig Nancy, and to be sold at Wilmington, in New Castle County (where Attendance is given) by Willing, Morris, and Company, Of PHILADELPHIA, ONE Hundred and Seventy fine Gold Coast NEGROES.’

“N.B. In the West India Islands, where Slaves are best known, those of the Gold Coast are in much greater Esteem, and higher valued, than any others, on Account of their natural good Dispositions, and being better capable of hard Labour.” (The Pennsylvania Gazette, May 6, 1762)

Stockholders Who Owned Slaves

The names of several of Bank of North America’s original stock holders appear on a list of slave owners in Pennsylvania in 1791. (Original Subscribers in 1781, 1782, 1783 & 1784 to Stock of Bank of N. A./Legatees by Will on Heirs at Law; cross-referenced with Nash 1973) However, as mentioned above, these names cannot be positively identified as belonging to the same people.

Research has independently identified one stock holder, Edward Burd, as having owned at least four slaves:

“Privately arranged sales, however, became the most common method of buying and selling chattel labor. Slaveholders could either inquire among friends and acquaintances whether it was known if any slaves were for sale, or they could watch the newspapers for advertisements listing slaves for sale. Slaveholders in the rural counties could not always find slaves available when they wanted them, and often resorted to contacts in Philadelphia. Such was the case with Lancaster attorney Jasper Yeates, who in 1770 wrote to Edward Burd in Philadelphia. Burd replied to Yeates' request to find a 'Negro Boy' for him:

'Philadelphia 5th July 1770

'Dear Sir

'I received your Favor of the 2d. Instant, In which you seem inclined to purchase a Negro Boy if no white Servt can be procured for you. I inquired 2 or 3 days ago at Mr. Saml. Howells who told me he had no servants of any kind at this Time to dispose of but expected a Palatine Ship in the Fall—Uncle Jo. last Fall got a Dutch Lad who cost him £26 or £27 & was to serve him 7 Yrs.—he learnt the English Language in a few Months, is very diligent & handy about every-thing.

'I don't know where you could get a Negro Lad, but if you could [not readable] would it not be better to take a Dutch one, as being in general more active strong & diligent & apter to learn & better disposed to do their Business & the loss is not so great in Case of their dying or turning out ill—however the Inconvenience of Nero [sic] Servants & the Trouble of teaching them their Duty is very great & if you could get a Negro Boy to answer your Description it would suit, I imagine very well,—but they are rare Ones. I don't know of any Negroes to be sold, but if I knew your Determin. I would make Inquiry. . . .

'Your. affectionate Brother
Edward Burd''' (Nagle 2005)

No other information could be found on the names listed below, except that their names appeared on both the list of original bank stock holders and the 1791 list of Pennsylvania slave owners. Slaves' names are given below, if identified (Nash 1973):

Benjamin Chew

Thomas Fitzsimmons

John Morton: George, Dinah, Hannah, and an un-named female child

Nathan Sellers

Edward Shippen: Hannah

James Sproat: Dinah

Mark Wilcox: Prince, Ceaser, Pegg, Luke, Tim, and Suck

Account Holders Who May Have Owned Slaves

The list contained in "Slaves and Slaveowners in Colonial Philadelphia" was compared to several Bank of North America's deposit ledgers that provided names of account holders. The process resulted in 186 possible matches. Although these names appear on both lists, there is no way for us to verify that these individuals are one and the same.

The names are as follows:

Bank of Baltimore (Baltimore)

Established: 1795

CONCLUSIONS

There is conclusive evidence of connections to slavery by the Bank of Baltimore, through its founders.

Three founders owned slaves. Chattel records indicate that Christopher Johnson, Louis Pascault, and George Salmon all owned an undetermined number of slaves. On November 10, 1793, Pascault indicated he would free a slave named Betsey (age 17) 10 years from that date. The year previous, on November 9, 1792, George Salmon emancipated a slave named Suky (spelling is uncertain due to partially illegible handwriting), who was “about” 20 years old.¹ Several presidents were heavily involved in merchant shipping, but it is as yet undetermined whether their business activities profited directly or indirectly from the institution of slavery.

Evidence exists that at least one bank customer owned slaves. According to a history of the Bank of Baltimore, “Early stockholders included Charles Carroll of Carrollton,”² who, in 1765, “inherited his father’s 40,000 acre estate and 285 slaves.”³ Chattel records indicate that he freed a slave in 1792, but nothing else of the disposition or identification of his slaves.⁴

The bank profited indirectly from slavery through the State of Maryland’s investments in the bank itself, and the bank’s investment in U.S. bonds. Bank of Baltimore received the state’s investments while it was a slave state. Further, Bank of Baltimore invested in U.S. bonds while the United States was taxing slaves as assets.

The bank held stock in a number of institutions and enterprises in both the private and public sectors. It is as yet undetermined whether any of these investments yielded dividends directly or indirectly from the institution of slavery.

None of the bank’s annual reports, minute books, account books and ledgers were found so little can be determined regarding individual transactions and whether slaves were posted as collateral on mortgages or whether the bank owned slaves as a result of defaults on such mortgages.

DETAILS

Four of the bank’s presidents were heavily involved in local commerce. The bank’s first president was William Wilson, who served from 1807 to 1824.⁵ From 1790 to about 1802, Wilson was in the shipping firm of Wilson and Maris. From about 1802 to 1862, Wilson operated a family shipping business under the name of William Wilson and Sons. This firm has been called “one of the eminent family shipping firms of their day, and owned a large number of vessels, which carried on an extensive trade with Calcutta and other East India ports, Holland, England, Brazil, West Coast of South America and China.”⁶ It has not been determined whether Wilson’s shipping firms had any connections to slavery.

William Lorman served as bank president from 1825 to 1841. Insurance records of the Baltimore Insurance Company Account Book (1796-1797) indicate that he held policies on shipping voyages to and from France, East Indies, St. Thomas, and Martinique in 1796 and 1797.⁷ It is undetermined if these voyages had any connections to slavery.

The manumission papers for 17 slaves owned by Thomas Wilkins were part of the Bank of Baltimore records; however, research to date has not determined Wilkins’ connection to the bank. The papers, produced in 1794, laid out the manumission of Wilkins’ slaves over a 20-year period, from 1794 to 1814.⁸

The bank’s investment activities included both public and private ventures. “From its very beginning the Bank had close relations with the State (the State of Maryland invested a total of $174,000 in the capital stock of the Bank of Baltimore) and Federal Governments, as well as with the City of Baltimore.”⁹ The Bank of Baltimore can be said to have indirectly profited from slavery from these investments because Maryland was a slave state from the time of the bank’s founding in 1795 and the U.S. government itself was profiting from slave labor at this time, as well.

Research uncovered some private stocks held by the Bank of Baltimore, including transportation companies. For example, in January 1830, the bank’s “resources” included “Road & other Stocks” in the amount of $90,140.¹⁰ The specific railroad companies have not been identified; however, at least some railroads in the 1830s used slave labor (see report for “Georgia Railroad Company” below). In 1841, the Bank of Baltimore made a loan to the City of Baltimore and the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, jointly, for $500,000.¹¹ The names of other firms, cities, or states that Bank of Baltimore invested in or transacted business with were not found in the bank’s records.

The Philadelphia Bank (Philadelphia)

Established: 1803; reorganized as Philadelphia National Bank in 1864

CONCLUSIONS

The Philadelphia Bank likely profited from slavery through its many investments in banks based in slave states. In addition, The Philadelphia Bank invested in railroad companies located in slave states.

Research has not yet been conducted to see whether those railroads used slave labor; however, slave labor was common among Southern railroad companies. Similarly, the bank invested for many years in the Chesapeake and Delaware Canal, which was built partially in slaveholding lands; however, research has not yet yielded evidence that slave labor was used to build the canal.

DETAILS

Following is a timeline of entries from the bank's minute books that reference transactions and investments with slaveholding states and with companies or projects located in slaveholding states. It must be emphasized that research has not been conducted into whether any of the enterprises below actually utilized slave labor. This is not an exhaustive list of questionable dealings and investments, but rather is a detailed sampling.

Volume 2: ca. 1808-1814

March 22, 1813: "Ordered that the cashier dispatch an officer of this institution with another confidential person to Baltimore with the Southern notes to procure drafts or notes on this city or New York. ... A communication from a branch of this bank established at Columbia, was read requesting an increase of capital of $30,000 which after consideration was agreed to be postponed."

June 14, 1813: "On motion it was agreed that the cashier submit to the board at their next meeting the plan of an arrangement for opening an account with The City Bank of Baltimore."

July 19, 1813: "A letter from S.W. Davis Cashier of the Farmers' and Mechanics' Bank of Cincinnati was read stating that he was desirous of having their account reopened with this bank which was ordered closed on the 21st."

November 29, 1813: "It was moved by Decandid [sp?] that the cashier inquire upon what terms the stock held by this bank in the Columbia [Maryland] Bridge Company can be disposed of."

Volume 7: February 11, 1830-April 19, 1841

March 27, 1834: The Philadelphia Bank exchanges notes with the Union Bank of Tennessee and the Bank of Maryland.

May 5, 1834: The Philadelphia Bank opens an intercourse with a branch of the State Bank of Alabama.

July 23, 1838: Transactions with the State Bank of Missouri (SBM) are noted. SBM had an account with The Philadelphia Bank at the time.

Volume 8: April 19, 1831-July 22, 1850

September 8, 1842: "On a motion to discount a draft drawn by the Memphis Bank on their agent at New Orleans endorsed by S. Wheatly for 5000 dollars due 1 January next year."

September 11, 1843: "On a motion resolved that the President be authorized to sell 10,000 of the Chesapeake and Delaware Canal loan as a price not less than 38. On motion President be authorized to sell the stock received as Interest on the State Loan at his discretion as the market price."

November 20, 1845: Bank notes are held from the Louisiana State Bank.

Volume 9: July 25, 1850-April 18, 1861

November 3, 1851: "Bills received from New Orleans and discounted in New Orleans."

February 24, 1863: Discounting bills from the Union Bank of Tennessee.

Volume 10: April 22, 1861-November 25, 1868

May 1, 1862: Statement of assets includes 136 shares stock in the Planters Bank of Tennessee.

November 3, 1862: Statement of assets, 136 shares of Planters Bank of Tennessee valued at $100 dollars a share. The Philadelphia Bank holds 140 shares of stock in the North Tennessee Railroad Company valued at $10 a share.

Farmers' and Mechanics' Bank (Philadelphia)

Established: 1807

CONCLUSIONS

Research confirms several specific connections between Farmers' and Mechanics' Bank of Philadelphia and profits derived from slavery. Notable links include financial investments in Grand Gulf Rail Road and Banking Company (New Orleans), a company known to have employed slave labor, and the reported personal holdings of a bank founder and one of its patrons. The name of Thomas Parker, an early bank director, appears on a Federal Census Data list of Pennsylvania slave owners from 1791 (Federal Census Data 1791; c/f afrolumens project 2005). Bank patron George Ege is listed in the same 1791 census data as owning a slave named Hester Evans.

DETAILS

Examined records indicate business ties, in the form of the stock holdings, to the Grand Gulf and Rail Road Banking Company (see Appendix A, Farmers' and Mechanics' Bank Citation Nos. 0006 and 0007). In a separate minute book entry dated November 15, 1842, a brief report to the Farmers' and Mechanics' Bank stockholders summarizes the affairs of this company as they were provided in a New York meeting of that company's investors. In addition to projecting a 30-to-50-percent return on the investments, the report also listed certain assets of Grand Gulf including:

“Cotton Notes	$101,000
Slave account	$5,500 [emphasis added]
Cotton Notes	$68,000
Cotton Notes	$99,000”

Though no additional information was available, specific reference to the “Slave Account” appears to confirm Grand Gulf's own connection to slavery—referring to either employed labor or outstanding bonds or mortgages linked to patrons' slave holdings.

Other documented investments in enterprises such as the Catawissa Rail Road Co., Turnpike, Bridge & Canal Co. (Pennsylvania), the Cumberland Valley Rail Road and Bank (Maryland), and the Columbia Bridge Co. (Maryland), also present potential ties to slavery; however, these companies' extant records have not been identified or searched to date.

A third area of possible interest would involve a more thorough analysis of the bank's property holdings. For example, at various points, the bank owned lands containing anthracite coal beds and mining sites in Suzerne County (see Appendix A, Citation No. 0011). One property in particular, the Mount Holly Estate, appears to offer some useful evidence. Federal census listings from 1791 also describe a Mr. George Ege as the owner of a slave named Hester Evans (Federal Census Data 1791; c/f afrolumens project 2005). In the Farmers and Mechanics' Bank records housed at the Historical Society of Pennsylvania, a ledger entry dated June 27, 1845, refers to an 1830 agreement by George Ege for an exchange of lands involving the “Holly” and “Pine Grove” Estates (see Appendix A, Citation No. 0001). During the 18th and 19th centuries, both locations were known to contain iron processing and furnace facilities that employed an unspecified number of skilled iron-workers (Keefer 2005). According to Nagle (2005), “Although not an agricultural operation, the Pennsylvania iron industry utilized large amounts of slave labor. Even small furnaces used a handful of slaves in a system similar to plantation management.” No conclusive evidence of slavery at Holly or Pine Grove Estates has yet been uncovered.

A final area of interest concerns the personal holdings of the bank’s directors. Federal census records and slave schedules from 1791 credit a Thomas Parker of Lancaster County with owning one “unnamed female slave” (Federal Census Data 1791; c/f afrolumens project 2005). Although the name corresponds to one on the Federal Census Data list of Pennsylvania slave owners, a final determination as to whether this is the same Thomas Parker who served as a bank director cannot yet be made. Another of the bank’s directors, Seth Craige, owned a cotton mill (Globe Mill) in Philadelphia ca. 1804, but so far no information regarding the company’s possible slavery involvement has been found.

CONCLUSIONS

Research revealed no conclusive evidence of the bank's direct connections to slavery; however, the bank invested in slaveholding states in the 1840s and 1850s. Neither its founders nor its directors have been researched to date.

DETAILS

Daybook records and directors minute books from 1844 and 1849 indicate the company held stock and bond investments in the State of Tennessee, a slaveholding state. Daybook records and directors minute books from 1851 and 1854 indicate that the company held stock and bond investments in the State of Kentucky, a slaveholding state.

State Bank of Elizabeth (Elizabeth, New Jersey)

Established: 1812

CONCLUSIONS

Research to date has not uncovered any primary source records of the bank's activities. Therefore, no conclusions can be made whether the bank profited from slavery. However, research has yielded evidence regarding connections to slavery by at least one individual associated with the State Bank of Elizabeth.

A major stockholder in the bank's early years was Thomas Gibbons (Rowland and Hall, 9), a wealthy slave-owning rice planter from Savannah, Georgia, who moved to Elizabeth (then Elizabeth-town) in 1810. The finding aid for the Gibbons Family Papers reports that he owned more than 500 slaves at the time of his death in 1826.

The bank held stock in a number of institutions and enterprises. However, it has not yet been determined if any of these investments were in enterprises that profited from slave labor.

DETAILS

Thomas Gibbons was a successful rice plantation owner (in South Carolina and Georgia) who moved to Elizabeth in 1810. In 1817, he began a business running steamboats between New York and New Jersey. Thomas Gibbons and his son, William, were business partners. Following Thomas' death in 1826, William Gibbons inherited his father's businesses and plantations, including more than 500 slaves. William lived in Madison, New Jersey, from 1832 until his death in 1852.

The Gibbons Family Papers indicate to some degree the nature and amounts of the family's pre-1865 investments. Between 1802 and 1811, Thomas Gibbons invested in the Morris and Essex Turnpike (see Images SBoE Gibbons04, SBoE Gibbons05, and SBoE Gibbons06).¹² When he died in May 1826, his stock value included:

Manhattan Bank: $1,582.64

E Town Bank: $468.58

State Bank of Newark: 200 shares

Planters Bank Stock: 30 shares

E. J. Bank Stock: 10 shares

S. J. Bank Stock: 5 shares

South Amboy and Bordertown Turnpike Stock: 50 shares

Shares of Morristown Turnpike Stock: [no share numbers given] (see Image SBoE Gibbons07).¹³

1855-1857: State Bank of Newark, $2364.08¹⁴ (see Image SBoE Gibbons09)

It is undetermined whether any of these projects profited from slave labor.

According to an official history of the bank published in 1837, Dr. Charles Davis, who was elected as a director in 1837 and president on April 20, 1840, also served as president of the Elizabeth Mutual Fire Insurance Company. It is undetermined whether this company was involved in slavery in any capacity (see Image SBoE Book16).¹⁵

The same history of the bank quotes the Minute Books from October 14, 1857: “This bank has an arrangement with the Manhattan Company of the City of New York ...”¹⁶ It is undetermined if this company was involved in slavery in any capacity. (see Image SBoE Book20)

The Kleinhaus books makes several references to railroads (Elizabeth and Somerville Railroad, Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, New Jersey Railroad) but no mention that the State Bank of Elizabeth or its customers invested in them.

State Bank of Newark (Newark, New Jersey)

Established: 1812

CONCLUSIONS

There is no direct evidence connecting the Savings Bank of Newark to slavery; however, one of the founders did own slaves.

No bank founders or account holders have been conclusively identified as slave owners at the time of the bank's creation in 1812. The bank was founded by wealthy and influential Newark-area businessmen. According to a bank history written in 1936, one founder, Moses N. Combs, was a local shoemaker and ordained Presbyterian minister who "set an example for the community by freeing his Negro slaves."¹⁸ It is undetermined whether he owned slaves at the time of the bank's creation and during its operation. No other founders have been determined to have owned slaves.

The bank held stock in a number of institutions and enterprises. However, it is undetermined if any of these investments yielded dividends from slave labor.

Since no records have been located, individual bank customers, their financial activities, and whether they benefited directly or indirectly from the institution of slavery is unknown.

DETAILS

The bank's founders were wealthy and influential local businessmen. The group consisted of local merchants and manufacturers involved in shoemaking, jewelry, silver plating, leather, groceries, and dry goods. Local industries included red stone quarrying, carriage and coach factories, hat shops, lacework houses, cider mills, and a considerable leather business. Almost one third of Newark's 6,000 residents in 1812 were employed in shoemaking.¹⁹

The bank and its account holders invested money in the following entities: Newark Bank and Insurance Company (later the National Newark and Essex Banking Company), Mechanics Bank of New York, the State of New Jersey, and the Manhattan Company. The 1937 book states that in the 1830s the bank's "business operations by now had spread throughout the land. We were in correspondence with institutions as distant as Savannah and Natchez."²⁰

At one point, the history of the State Bank of Newark mentions "Our minutes report that...",²¹ indicating that the bank's archival records existed as of 1937. The disposition or location of these archival materials is undetermined.

Savings Bank of Baltimore (Baltimore)

Established: 1818

CONCLUSIONS

There is no conclusive evidence regarding connections to slavery by the Savings Bank of Baltimore. However, the bank did profit indirectly from slave labor by virtue of antebellum stock investments held in the Commonwealth of Virginia, which was a slave state. Similarly, The Savings Bank of Baltimore invested in the U.S. government before the Civil War. Because the U.S. government collected taxes on business dealings connected to slavery before the Civil War, the bank can be said to have profited indirectly from slavery. The bank also held antebellum stock in North Carolina State Bank, which resided in a slave state; however, time constraints prevented research into the accounts of North Carolina State Bank.

DETAILS

Based on the bank's charter and the profiles of many account holders, the bank was founded primarily as an institution for the poor and laboring classes of Baltimore. The bank functioned as a place where working people could deposit money and save. Extensive account ledgers exist of individual customers but do not indicate what transactions were for; amounts only for deposits, withdrawals and dividends are listed. The bank's many mortgages were almost exclusively limited to the city of Baltimore and included only real estate. At least one mortgage loan was denied because the property was located outside county lines.

The bank engaged in acts of charity such as donating money for winter clothing for women. It also held accounts for orphanages, churches, and other philanthropic organizations within the city of Baltimore.

Many account holders' names were of women. In addition, research uncovered references to the bank holding accounts of free blacks.

Girard National Bank (Philadelphia)

Established: 1832

CONCLUSIONS

On the basis of a single secondary source, research indicates that Girard National Bank profited at least indirectly from slavery. Girard National Bank transacted business with a bank (New Orleans Canal and Banking Company, estab. 1832) that profited from slavery.

No extant primary source materials for Girard National Bank have been located to date.

DETAILS

A history of Girard National Bank describes the new bank's business interaction with the New Orleans Canal & Banking Company:

“The Committee on the proposition of the City Bank of New Orleans made a report which was accepted and the cashier was instructed to communicate with the Bank in accordance therewith. ... The Cashier reported that he had written to the Cashier of the City Bank of New Orleans agreeing to transact the business of that Bank on the same terms as those on which the Comm. Bank transacts the business of the N.O. Canal & Banking Co. ... On motion the Board approved of the variation & adopted the Report ... July 31, 1832.” (Granville, p. 46)

A link on the Web page www.rootsweb.com posts the text of Conveyance Records from Catahoula Parish, Louisiana, which detail slave ownership and conveyance. The page cites several examples of slaves being mortgaged as collateral through New Orleans Canal & Banking Company.

Georgia Railroad Company/Georgia Railroad & Banking Company (Augusta)

Established: 1833

CONCLUSIONS

The Georgia Railroad & Banking Company, which was established by an act of the General Assembly of Georgia, December 21, 1833, to “direct and confine their first efforts and enterprise to the formation and completion of a railroad communication between the City of Augusta and some point in the interior of the State,”²² relied on slave labor for the construction and maintenance of this railway. Three of the Company’s principal founding directors, James A. Camak, E.L. Newton, and James Shannon, were slaveholders.

DETAILS

Clarke County, Georgia, tax digests show that James A. Camak, who served as president of the Georgia Railroad & Banking Company from 1834 to 1836 and continued to be an active officer for many years thereafter, owned between 9 and 10 taxable slaves during tax years 1847 to 1850 (see Images GARRBC-1 and GARRBC-2).²³ That Camak owned slaves is further substantiated by measured drawings of the Camak House at 279 Meigs Street, Athens, Georgia, which indicate the presence of slave quarters in the basement (see Image GARRBC-3).²⁴ Tax digest listings for tax years 1847 to 1850 also confirm that E.L. Newton held between 9 and 11 taxable slaves (see Images GARRBC-4 and GARRBC-5).²⁵ James Shannon held 6 taxable slaves during this period (see Image GARRBC-6).²⁶

Construction of the railroad from Augusta west to Athens commenced in December 1834. Grading of the first 87 miles of the road was completed by May 1837 and was largely carried out by Northern White laborers. Evidence suggests, however, that in April of 1836, Chief Engineer J. Edgar Thomson submitted a letter to the board of directors in which he recommended the procurement of slave labor for work on the railroad (see Image GARRBC-7).²⁷ Persistent inflation had drastically lowered salary levels, and this, coupled with the desertion of workers who did not wish to endure another summer in the Southern heat, resulted in a severe labor shortage. A resolution adopted by the board of directors on October 25, 1836, authorized Charles H. Phinzy, who was later elected first president of the Georgia Railroad Bank, to “purchase twelve young negroes for the use of the rail road” (see Image GARRBC-8).²⁸ Soon after, advertisements were taken out in the Southern Banner offering “liberal prices for 12 to 14 active, intelligent young negroes from 16 to 21 years old” (see Images GARRBC-9 and GARRBC-10).²⁹ J. Edgar Thomson, in efforts to secure the number of workers needed to compensate for those who had recently fled, responded to allegations of mistreatment leveled against David Cooper & Brothers, a contractor to whom work above Crawfordsville had been let. In a November 12 advertisement announcing the need for 300 “negroes,” Thomson endorsed David Cooper & Brothers, assuring local planters that the contractor’s treatment of hired slaves was humane (see Image GARRBC-11).³⁰ The following month, another contractor, H.N. Wilson, sought 100 slaves for work on the road above Crawfordsville (see Image GARRBC-12).³¹

By May 1838, the board of directors had assented to Thomson’s proposal that the Athens and Greensboro branches be placed under contract, believing that “the principal part of the contracts will be taken by planters in the vicinity of the line, who will find it a more profitable employment for their hands than the planting of cotton, at its present reduced price” (see Image GARRBC-13).³²

While it was awarding work to contractors who used slave labor, the Georgia Railroad & Banking Company was actively acquiring slaves. In February of 1837, the board appointed a committee to purchase “sixty negro men suitable for labor on the rail road” (see Image GARRBC-14),³³ and in November, 55 additional men were authorized to be bought “for the departments of Transportation and Repairs on the road” (see Image GARRBC-15).³⁴

Minutes for the years 1838 to 1842 verify the activities of the board of directors with respect to the continued procurement and keeping of slaves. On October 9, 1838, President William E. Dearing was granted permission to purchase a blacksmith “at $1200, to be paid for in rail road stock” (see Image GARRBC-16).³⁵ Dearing reported having acquired slaves on two subsequent occasions, notifying the directors on January 14, 1840 that he had purchased fifteen negroes for service on the road (see Image GARRBC-17),³⁶ and on May 12, 1841, that he had obtained possession of the wife and child of a man owned by the company (see Image GARRBC-18).³⁷

At a meeting held October 11, 1838, the board was prompted by the death of four slaves to deliberate on its accounting practices:

“A question was raised whether the Road should be charged with the hire of the negroes owned by the company or with interest on their cost; and it was determined that it should be charged with the interest; and further, that inasmuch as the negroes have increased in value since they were owned by the company, the value of the four that have died should not be carried to profit & loss (see Images GARRBC-19 and GARRBC-20).”³⁸

During that meeting, a bill “for clothing for the company’s negroes” was ordered to be paid (see Image GARRBC-21).³⁹ Similar action was recorded the following year, when the board resolved that the agent of transportation should provide the company’s slaves with clothing for the upcoming winter (see GARRBC-22).⁴⁰

The company’s use of slave labor in its Augusta car factory is corroborated by the discussion of a matter brought before the board in August 1840:

“The Board considered the offerings & agreed to discount $1000 note of Richard H. Wilde’s ... secured by the mortgage of a slave named Isaiah now in the company’s employment in their Car Factory” (see Image GARRBC-23).”⁴¹

The board of directors was at times inclined to appoint agents for dealings involving slaves. In December of 1840, a loan in the amount of $4,000-$6,000 was issued to James Daniel, who asked that the board authorize him to use this money to purchase slaves at the sale of the property of John A. Cobb. Daniel proposed selling the slaves again and “dividing the profits of such sale with the Bank” (see Image GARRBC-24).⁴² William D. Fullton was designated representative of the Georgia Railroad & Banking Company to attend a sheriff’s sale in Hall County in May 1842 and was instructed by the board “to take any measures, or do any thing to secure the interests of said company touching the sale of negroes or other property mortgaged to the company, or on which it may have any claim, lien or incumbrance [sic] whatever” (see Image GARRBC-25).⁴³

In his report to the Convention of Stockholders, May 9, 1842, J. Edgar Thomson declared that the original objective of the company, “to construct a Rail or Turnpike Road from the City of Augusta, with branches extending to the towns of Eatonton, Madison, in Morgan County, and Athens,” had been fulfilled.⁴⁴ Among the operating costs listed in the cashier’s statement accompanying his report were “provisions, clothing, doctors bills and other expenses of negroes” (see Image GARRBC-26).⁴⁵ The total valuation of slaves held by the company was assessed in 1842 and 1843 at $48,925.50 (see Images GARRBC-27 and GARRBC-28).⁴⁶

In 1844, Director Henry H. Cumming began to develop plans for the construction of a power and navigation canal in the City of Augusta. Responding to his call for public support of this venture, the Georgia Railroad and Banking Company made a subscription in 1845 of $1,000 to aid in the construction of the canal.⁴⁷ According to an account written for the Historic American Engineering Record, “slaves and whites from the hills of north Georgia composed the labor force” that built the Augusta Canal.⁴⁸

The Superintendent’s report of 1861 set the total value of slaves held by the Company at $24,100,⁴⁹ which suggests that reliance on slave labor began to decline after the railroad reached its final terminus in Marthasville (Atlanta) in 1845.

Records Formats

The research team encountered considerable difficulty accessing the cache of records at Augusta State University's library, which houses perhaps the most complete records of the Georgia Banking & Railroad Company. Its collection consists of company records from ca. 1834-1957. The records include minutes of the Board of Directors (1834-1957), minutes of the stockholders meetings (1835-1929), annual reports (1850-1945), General Manager annual reports (1881-1932), statement books (1897-1942), stock transfers, stock ledgers (1837-1904), general ledgers (1836-1923), deeds, leases, contracts, and some correspondence.

However, of those materials, the research team was only permitted to view the following chronologically relevant materials: Minutes of Stockholders, Vol. 1; and Minutes of Board of Directors, Vols. 1-3. Specifically, the team was not allowed to view annual reports (1850-ca. 1865), stock transfers, stock ledgers (1837-ca. 1865), general ledgers (1836-ca. 1865), deeds, leases, contracts or correspondence of the company. John O'Shea, librarian at the Reese Library Special Collections division, said that he could not permit the materials to be viewed because they were too fragile and damaged from a previous flood.

Bank of Charleston (Charleston, South Carolina)

Established: 1834

CONCLUSIONS

Research has uncovered significant demonstrable evidence that the Bank of Charleston profited directly from slavery and slaveholding interests. From auction and estate sale fliers, to the reports of account holders' assets and mortgaged property, primary and secondary sources yielded extensive examples of the Bank of Charleston's and its patrons' slavery-derived business interests. The evidence is found in four general areas:

1. The provision of loans, mortgages, and/or bonds wherein slave holdings, or "negroes" as the bank's records reported, were specifically employed by patrons as collateral.
2. Documented business ties to other companies (e.g., stock ownership, loan provisions) known to have purchased, sold and/or employed slave labor in their day-to-day operations.
3. The personal holdings and business activities of the Bank's founders, directors, and officers.
4. Business activities that both directly and indirectly supported the cause of the Confederacy leading up to and during the Civil War (e.g., loans, purchase of Confederate stock and bond certificates).

In several documented instances, mortgagees defaulted on their loans, and the Bank of Charleston took temporary possession of the mortgaged property—including slaves. The total number of slaves that the bank took possession of from 1834 to 1865 cannot be accurately tallied, however, due to the lack of exhaustive records from that period. See the "Details" section below for statistical information and detailed analysis of the slaves Bank of Charleston took into its possession.

Several of the bank's directors and officers, including its first president, James Hamilton, and board members such as H. W. Connor, either owned slaves or served (sometimes concurrently) on the boards of other companies that employed slave labor.

A review of the bank's account ledgers dating primarily between the late 1830s and 1860 revealed a minimum of 24 individual transactions involving specific reference to slaves, or "negroes," being deployed as collateral in the procurement of loans and mortgages.

Records also documented clear business ties, in the form of loans and stock purchases (purchases of Bank of Charleston stock and vice-versa), with other companies and businesses known to have purchased and utilized slave labor. Prominent examples in this category include the South Carolina Rail Road Company, the Southwestern Rail Road Bank, and the Georgia Railroad Bank (see "Georgia Railroad Company" above for details of that institution's ties to slavery).

Finally, extant Confederate stock certificates and various account ledger entries confirm the Bank of Charleston's active support of the Confederate State Government beginning around 1860. By 1862, that support exceeded $1.5 million.

DETAILS

Area 1: Banking Transactions Involving Slaves or “Negroes” and/or Banking Patrons Known To Have Owned Slaves

Research of two separate account ledgers, the Bonds and Mortgages Account Book (Vol. 1), 1838-1862, housed at the South Carolina Historical Society, and Debt, Losses, Corporate Bonds, Stocks, Real Estate (Vol. 1: 1837, 1840, 1842-1845, 1850-1861), located at the College of Charleston, uncovered a minimum of 24 separate transactions involving “slaves” or “negroes” (see Images BOC-03-05, 07-10, 15-18, 22-34, 36, 37, and 39). In each case, a number of slaves were either specified as collateral to secure a bond or mortgage or received in payment of a pre-existing debt or judgment. As an example, Page 47 of the Bond and Mortgage Account Book (Vol. 1: 1838-1862) offers a summary of account activity for bank patron, Dr. James Troup, between the years 1846 and 1848. Troup secured a loan through a bond and mortgage of “47 Negroes & Plantation called New Hope” (see Image BOC-18). Page 54 of the same volume offers a summary of payments made by John R. and Langdon Cheves on a “Bond & Mortgage of 29 Negroes” secured March 17, 1847 (see Image BOC-22).

The total volume of slaves, or “negroes,” conveyed during this period—compiled from the 23 transactions in which a specific number was provided—totaled 529 (see Table 1.1; see Image BOC-02).

In most cases the loan was paid on schedule, and the bank held only the mortgage on the property in question. In some instances, however, the borrower defaulted on a loan and the bank took temporary possession (through judgment or purchase of an outstanding bond) of a mortgaged property. A case in point is the Stoney Baynard Plantation. At some point in the early 1800s, brothers John and James Stoney began purchasing large tracts of land on Hilton Head Island, South Carolina (Trinkley 1991). In the process of their land deals, John Stoney became heavily indebted to a list of creditors. In 1837, he mortgaged “virtually all of his real and personal property to the Bank of Charleston ... for the amount of $400,000” (Trinkley 1991, p. 12).

The same holdings reportedly included Leamington and Calibogie plantations on Hilton Head Island and more than 300 slaves (Trinkley 1991: 13). Upon Stoney's death in 1838, several court cases arose in connection with his outstanding debt as creditors attempted to obtain payment. Consequently, as noted by Trinkley (1991), “Some of Stoney's property was purchased by the Bank of Charleston,” including a tract of land on Hilton Head that later became known as the Stoney Baynard Plantation. In 1845, the Bank sold the same property to William E. Baynard, and upon his death four years later, the land fell to his son, Ephraim Baynard. In the ledger Debt, Losses, Corporate Bonds, Stocks, Real Estate (Vol. 1: 1837, 1840, 1842-1845, 1850-1861), reference is made to “W. E. Baynard's Bond and Mortgage for Caleboga Plantation at a value of ... $7,698.02” (see Image BOC-13).

The 1850 agricultural census reported a value of $12,000 for the property, and indicated the production of 36 bales of cotton (Trinkley 1991). Although it is unknown exactly how many slaves resided on the property, their presence is confirmed by 1992 archaeological investigations in which the remains of several slave quarters were documented (Littlejohn 1995).

Area Two: Business Ties to Other Institutions Known To Have Sold, Purchased or Employed Slaves

Research also found business ties between the Bank of Charleston and several other companies (e.g., banks, rail roads, and manufacturing facilities) that either employed slave labor in their day-to-day operations, or financially supported the institutions through the extension of bonds or mortgages to slave owners. The most prominent examples in this area are The South Carolina Rail Road Company (e.g., see Image BOC-43), the Southwestern Rail Road Bank (see Image BOC-73), and the Georgia Railroad Bank (see Image BOC-04).

An annual stockholders report from 1844 details the debts and assets of the Bank of Charleston. Among the items listed are stock holdings in the Southwestern Rail Road Bank valued at $12,500.00 (Annual Report Stockholders Report, July 5, 1844, p. 12; see Image BOC-73). In reviewing the latter institution's extant records, two separate slave mortgages were found that listed "Sixteen Negroes" (1854) and "Six Negroes" (1855) provided by the Southwestern Railroad Bank to a James Macbeth (see Image BOC-52).

At various times, the Bank of Charleston was also similarly invested in the South Carolina Rail Road Company (see BOC-Images 42, 43, 66, 69, and 70). In that institution's Directors Minute Book (1850-1868) references are made to approved purchases of "Negro" laborers (see Images BOC-44 and 46) and the hiring of a physician to attend to the "Company Negroes" (see Image BOC-47).

A third example involves an 1859 loan agreement between the Bank of Charleston and Mark Anthony Cooper, then president of the Etowah Manufacturing and Iron Company of Bartow County Georgia (see Images BOC-57a and BOC-57b). Independent sources confirm that until the facility's destruction by Union troops in 1863, Cooper had not only employed slave laborers (Columbus [Georgia] Daily Sun, May 26, 1864; c/f Melton 2005) but had also provided material support (e.g., iron for rails and munitions) to the Confederate States Army and invested heavily in Confederate stocks (Melton 2005; Parker 2002).

Area Three: Activities and Holdings of Bank of Charleston Founders, Directors, and Officers

In addition to the ties established through daily business operations, connections between the Bank of Charleston and slavery were also documented through the actions and holdings of its directors and officers. Several individuals, including the institution's first president, James Hamilton, either owned slaves themselves or held directorship positions in other companies known to have purchased, sold, or employed slaves. Hamilton, for instance, owned several rice plantations in the South Carolina Low Country, including one located on the Savannah River called Rice Hope (Dictionary of American Biography VIII, p. 188; see also Image BOC-10). In 1842, Hamilton purchased 22 slaves from A. H. Middleton (see Image BOC-53). Henry Gourdin, one of the bank's founders and a member of its board of directors, is listed in 1860 Federal Census data as the owner of four slaves (Blake 2001). John Cheesborough, also a long-time board member of the bank, is documented as owning 20 slaves, according to the same census (Blake 2001).

In other instances, standing or former directors and officers served similar roles on the boards of other companies known to have employed slaves. H. W. Connor, a former Bank of Charleston president (1839-1840, 1841-1850), served the South Carolina Rail Road Company as president from 1850 to 1861. Ker Boyce, a bank founder and director (1835-1838, 1838-1840, 1841-1850), was instrumental in establishing the Louisville, Cincinnati and Charleston Railroad Company (Schweikart 1985), and later served on the board of the South Carolina Railroad Company, which subsumed the former in a merger during the 1830s (see Image BOC-45).

Area 4: Financial Support of the Confederate State Government

In the late 1850s and throughout the Civil War, the Bank of Charleston, like many Southern banks, provided support to the newly established Confederate State government. The Bank of Charleston provided loan assistance (through Confederate stock purchases) that by 1862 topped $1.5 million (Stoney 1955). An 1862 entry in a Bank of Charleston account ledger (Debt, Losses, Corporate Bonds, Stocks, Real Estate, Vol. 1: 1837, 1840, 1842-1845, 1850-1861) described the bank's then-current Confederate stock holdings:

“Confederate State 6 per[cent]
To 15. Certificates $100.000. dated
3 May 1862, bearing 6% Interest payable 1st Jan & 1st July and Numbered 2020 to 2034 ... 1.500.000”

Other noted ledger references and examples of Confederate stocks purchased by the bank further verify this connection (see Images BOC-06, 39, 40, 63-65, 68a, and 68b).

The bank's Confederate ties also extended beyond financial support. As Peter Stoney (1955) described: “Possibly with some sense of irony, the bank, at the end of June 1864, gave to the Charleston Arsenal for cartridge making the books of the defunct Bank of the United States” (Stoney 1955, p. 33).

Bank of Charleston Directors and Officers With Documented Ties to Slavery

Boyce, Ker (founder; director, 1835-1838; 1838-1840; 1841-1850)

1. A founder of the Louisville, Cincinnati & Charleston Rail Road Co.
2. Director of the South Carolina Rail Road Co.
Note: Historical records confirm that the South Carolina Rail Road Co. purchased and utilized slave labor in the construction and maintenance of the rail line (see Appendix A, Citation No. 42).

Cheeseborough, John (director, 1835-1836; 1860-1865)

1. 1860 Federal Census/Slave Schedule lists a Cheeseborough, as an owner of 20 slaves: “Cheeseborough, Jno., 20, Charleston Ward 4, page 452A.” (Blake 2001)

Conner, Henry W. (founder; president, 1839-1840; 1841-1850; director, 1835-1839; 1840-1841; 1850-1851)

1. President of the South Carolina Rail Road Co. (1850–1861)
2. Director of the South Carolina Rail Road Co. (1850-1861)
Note: Historical records confirm that the South Carolina Rail Road Co. purchased and utilized slave labor in the construction and maintenance of the rail line (see Appendix A, Citation No. 42)

Gourdin, Henry (founder)

1. 1860 Federal Census/Slave Schedule lists a “Gourdin, Henry” as an owner of four slaves: “Gourdin, Henry, 4, Charleston Ward 1, page 406A.” (Blake 2001)

Hamilton, James (first president, 1835-1837)

1. Hamilton owned several rice plantations in the South Carolina Low Country, including one located on the Savannah River called Rice Hope. (Dictionary of American Biography VIII: 188; see also Appendix A, Bank of Charleston Citation No. 0008)
2. Historical records also revealed a purchase by Hamilton in 1842 of 22 slaves from A. H. Middleton. (Appendix A, Citation No. 0051)

Lawton, W. M. (director, 1860; the duration of his service has not yet been determined)

1. 1860 Federal Census/Slave Schedule lists a “Lawton, Wm. M.” in Charleston County, South Carolina, as an owner of 70 slaves: “Lawton, Wm. M., 70, Charleston Ward 4, page 452B.” (Blake 2001)

Lowndes, Charles T. (president, 1857; director, 1860; the duration of his service has not yet been determined)

1. 1860 Federal Census/Slave Schedule lists a “Lowndes, C.T.” as an owner of 370 slaves: “Lowndes, C.T., 370 slaves, St. Bartholomew’s, 63.” (Blake 2001)

Lucas, J. (director, 1844; the duration of his service has not yet been determined)

1. 1860 Federal Census/Slave Schedule lists a “Lucas, J.” as an owner of one slave: “Lucas, J., 1, Charleston Ward 8, page 492A.” (Blake 2001)

Rose, A. G. (director, 1839-1840, 1841-1850, 1856-1865)

1. 1860 Federal Census/Slave Schedule lists a “Lucas, J.” as an owner of eight slaves: “Rose, A. G., 8, Charleston Ward 4, page 457B.” (Blake 2001)

Trenholm, G. A. (director, ?-1844; 1860)

1. 1860 Federal Census/Slave Schedule lists a “Trenholm, George A.” as an owner of 39 slaves: “Trenholm, George A., 39, Charleston Ward 6, page 478B.” (Blake 2001)

Wiley, Leroy M. (founder; director, 1834-?; 1844-?; the duration of his service has not yet been determined)

“Like the typical Southerner who made money in business or the professions, he also invested in plantations and slaves.” (Scott 1997)

City National Bank (Philadelphia)

Established: 1855

CONCLUSIONS

No conclusion could be reached regarding any connection between City National Bank and profiting from slavery.

DETAILS

The lone volume located for City National Bank contains a long list of certificates with names of people who bought stock in the bank. There are no home cities or counties for the more than 1,000 individuals listed. Since Pennsylvania instituted a gradual emancipation of slavery in 1780, by 1857 any slaveholders banking with CNB would have either had to live out of state or own enterprises in slave-holding states. In addition, even if research on census records of slaveholders matched the names on CNB's investor list, there is no way to verify that they were the same individuals. For this reason, the research team chose to pursue work on other banks' records.

Atlanta National Bank (Atlanta)

Established: 1865

CONCLUSIONS

Because Atlanta National Bank was established after emancipation, the bank could not have profited directly from slavery.

DETAILS

Preliminary research on the bank's founding president, General Alfred Austell, has not uncovered evidence that he owned slaves. Austell was a brigadier general in the Georgia Militia prior to the Civil War; however, no information has come to light regarding how Austell earned his income (i.e., whether it was from a slave-labor-based industry). Austell did help establish a Black Presbyterian church in Atlanta (A Course Well Chartered, 20).

First National Bank of Clarksville (Clarksville, Tennessee)

Established: 1865

CONCLUSIONS

To date, no evidence of a connection has been found between the activities or account holdings of the First National Bank of Clarksville and the practice of slavery.

DETAILS

The U.S. Treasury approved the organization of the bank in 1865 to “handle national currency and obligations” (Waters, 77). Given the fact that the bank was established post-emancipation and that it was sponsored as a “Unionist” institution by the U.S. Treasury, and noting that official circulation of notes did not occur until 1871 (Beach, 239), the potential for a demonstrable connection to slavery is considered minimal.

In addition, pre-Civil War banking firms still operating in the area at this time (e.g., the Northern Bank) were rejected as possible fiscal agents due to the ex-Confederate status of certain standing board members (Waters, 77).

Several secondary sources comprising only general historical treatments of the bank were located (Library of Congress, University of Tennessee Special Collections Department, and the Clarksville-Montgomery County Public Library), but these offered little relevant information. Despite a thorough search of available online resources and consultation with several local archivists and genealogists, no extant primary records related to the bank or its founders have been located.

Date: c. 1830

Notes: “Regarding lands in Georgia...” [From a Letter written by James M. Wayne to Benjamin M. Richards (of Bank of North America), Savannah, Georgia, June 25, 1830]:

“...Not knowing the localities of these lands in the counties I cannot speak of their present or prosperiti [sic] or value. But if those in Montgomery should being the neighborhood of the projected canal between Savannah and the Allamada [sic] River twenty miles of which is done leaving forty seven to be dug then will be valuable and of those in Washington I can only say that it is a prosperous Cotton Country in which the Lands although not the most fertile have been enough so to keep the people working them...”

Comments: There appears to have been some disagreement as to who actually owned these lands, as there were claimants in Georgia who, at the time, already resided on said tract. The bank contracted with someone (presumably James M. Wayne) to assess the Georgia properties and try to determine who held the oldest grants. (Land Books, Vol. 2: p.125)

Item/Source: Director’s Book of Letters

Catalogue No.: Phi 1543 [Section 14: Miscellaneous]

Date: May 1793 to June 19, 1798

Notes: Listed among the authors of the letters: Captain Wharton, Captain Morris and Captain Willing. The letter book is a compilation of documents relating to the trade, sale and shipping of various goods including coffee, sugar, rum and tea from the West Indies to the United States. Goods were shipped along the East Coast from Boston down to Charleston, South Carolina. Although there are some vague references to property belonging to various merchants, the wording of these letters is not clear enough to establish a definite connection to slavery. However, it seems as if a few of the “Captains” either held an account or stock with the Bank of North America.

July 24, 1793: Letter from Captain Wharton pertaining to shipments of goods.

July 26, 1793: “I have of this minute received yours of yesterday and shall apply immediately to Mr. Genet for the papers you wish, at the same time informing him, that you are about to send very shortly a person to recover if possible your property in, lately seized in Hispanola and thereupon request him to prepare his dispatches as soon as possible” Signed, Post

September 24, 1804: Heavily financed the Delaware and Schuylkill Canal Company. Many references to the transfer of the Mount Morris Estate.

July 5, 1821: “A letter from Benjamin R. Morgan and George Fox dated Harrisburg June 29 last was read deriving that the bond and mortgage of Robert Waln assigned to the bank might be placed with William Rawles(?) Esq. to obtain judgment thereon and enable the Bank to sell in due course of law. Whereupon it is agreed that the bond and mortgage of Robert Waln on the 13th of May 1819 to Pattison Hartshorne and Benjamin R. Morgan for 32,216.67 with interest from date and by them assigned to the Bank of North America in security for the debts specifically raised on the said bond. Be agreeably to the request of B.R. Morgan sued with cause(?) to judgment by W. Rawle in the directors of the bank. W. Rawle to receipt for said Bond and Mortgage when delivered to him for suit.”

Bank of North America acquired a bond and mortgage of Robert Waln. Waln’s name appears on a list of known slaveholders in Pennsylvania. (Nash, Gary. “Slaves and Slaveowners in Colonial Philadelphia.” The William and Mary Quarterly, 3rd Series, 30(2) 1973: 223-256.)

June 10, 1822: “It is agreed to liquidate the debt due by Robert Waln to this bank secured.”

Citation: “Etowah Works, GA.: Probably Etowah Iron Works. Operated by Quinby & Robinson (q.v.). Made shot and shell. Etowah Iron Works, Cartersville, GA., Mark A. Copper [sic], proprietor. On April 21, 1861, the Confederate Government contracted with the above for both field pieces and 8 and 10-inch Columbiads, but Copper proved unable to fill the contract. (Vandiver, 62-63) It was reported that the plant employed 500 hands. (Albaugh and Simons, 213). The firm was later bought out by William Quinby and William Robinson, formerly of Memphis. There is no indication that any cannon were ever cast at the plant. The War Department at one time studied Cartersville as a possible site for a national cannon foundry, but Selma, Alabama, was later selected. The Columbus Daily Sun of May 26, 1864, reported that all the machinery and stores at the plant had been removed by rail and the 250 slaves by wagon train.” [emphasis added]
