6. PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION

The Douglas Political Club at 106 E. Sharpnack Street is a two-and-one-half-story masonry house that stands on a corner lot in the Mt. Airy neighborhood of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. The setting of the subject house is a medium-sized, corner lot, which extends from the southeast side of E. Sharpnack Street. There is yard space at the front, side, and rear of the subject building. The yard is fenced by matured plantings, including a topiary hedge, and the remains of an iron hairpin fence.

The Douglas Political Club is comprised of two volumes: the main block (ca.1853-56) and the rear addition (Post 1942). The main block is a two-and-one-half-story stone structure that is clad in stucco, which has been concealed by faux-lapped siding. The rear addition is a two-story masonry building that appends the rear of the main volume. Overall, the main volume represents a typical detached Federal and/or Germantown Vernacular style dwelling.

The primary (northwest) elevation is three bays in width with an entry door at the northernmost bay, which is concealed by a projecting vestibule of concrete block construction, featuring a single entry door. The vestibule is non-contributing. The two additional bays that serve the first floor are windows that have been infilled. The northerly window features an air-conditioning unit, while the southerly window features glass block. Rising above the first-floor windows, the original fenestration of the second floor is basically intact, though the three openings feature replacement units. The roof features a large gable-front dormer, which originally had two windows, one of which has been covered in faux-lapped siding. The roof is clad in asphalt shingles.

The northeast elevation is largely a blind stucco-clad wall with five openings—two at the basement level; two on the second floor; and one on the third floor. The basement windows are set within an exposed rubble stone foundation. The second-floor windows include an original opening with a replacement unit and a small new window, both of which are near the center of the elevation. The third, half-story, located within the gable, features a fanlight at center. The northeast elevation of the rear volume appears to be a blind stucco-clad wall.

The southwest elevation includes both the main and rear volumes. The main volume is two-and-one-half stories with two windows per floor. The two first floor windows have been infilled—the northern with glass block and the southern with an air-conditioning unit. Immediately above the first-floor openings, the second-floor windows feature replacement units. The gable end of the third, half-story features two windows, one placed on each side of the interior chimney.

The rear volume is two stories featuring five openings on the first floor and four on the second. The first floor features four windows, all filled with glass block, and a pedestrian door. Three of the second-floor windows have also been infilled with glass block, though one opening features a replacement unit.

The southeast (rear) elevation of the main volume is limited to the roof, which features a single dormer. The rear (southeast) elevation of the rear volume features two openings on the first floor—a pedestrian door and an infilled window. The second floor features two infilled window openings and a pedestrian door accessed by a metal staircase.

7. STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Douglas Political Club at 106 E. Sharpnack Street in the Mt. Airy neighborhood of Philadelphia is a significant historic resource that merits designation by the Philadelphia Historical Commission and inclusion on the Philadelphia Register of Historic Places. The building satisfies the following Criteria for Designation as enumerated in Section 14-1004 of the Philadelphia Code:

- a) Has significant character, interest, or value as part of the development, heritage, or cultural characteristics of the City, Commonwealth, or Nation or is associated with a person significant in the past; and
- j) Exemplifies the cultural, political, economic, social or historical heritage of the community.

The period of significance for the subject property dates to the time of construction in ca.1853-56, as well as the period related to African American history from 1921 to 1961.

CRITERION A AND J

The subject building represents the early development and heritage of East Mt. Airy, as it transformed from a Germanic village to a dense town-like community, and eventually a suburb of Philadelphia. In 1849, as part of the settlement of the Estate of Benjamin Sharpnack, the thoroughfare known as Sharpnack Street was opened, extending from Germantown Avenue, immediately above the Sharpnack House, to the northeast. The newly established street initially included several houses and one factory. Joseph Randall & Bros. built the first buildings of the Franklin Hosiery Yarn Mills between 1856 and 1865.¹ Before that, the first houses were constructed between 1849 and 1856, which included the subject building. This house is one of several that was developed in partnership with John Hergesheimer, a house carpenter, and a descendent of the Sharpnack family. The subject building is one of the oldest houses standing on E. Sharpnack Street and represents the initial phase of its development and heritage, satisfying Criterion A and J.

HISTORIC CONTEXT: THE DEVELOPMENT OF E. SHARPBACK STREET

The land upon which the subject building stands was once part of a larger tract that was owned by Benjamin Sharpnack (1779-1834), a prominent merchant and Dunker, who died unmarried and without issue. After he passed away in 1834, his unmarried sisters, Mary Sharpnack (1777-1841) and Sarah Sharpnack (1773-1849), occupied the old family house, which stood at what is now the east corner of Germantown Avenue and Sharpnack Street.² The Sharpnack House had been the domicile of their parents, Henry Sharpnack (1733-1820) and Sarah Nyse Sharpnack (1749-1822), and was just a stone’s throw from the Church of the Brethren, where the elder Sharpnacks too were prominent Dunkers.³ In 1849, after the deaths of both Mary and Sarah Sharpnack, as well as Elizabeth Sharpnack Hergesheimer (1765-1846), another daughter of Henry Sharpnack, and all of the Elizabeth Sharpnack Hergesheimer’s children, the Estate of Benjamin Sharpnack was divided among his heirs: 1. Ann Catherine Sharpnack Stook (1809-1871), the wife of Samuel A. Stook and the only daughter of John Sharpnack (1769-1821), another son of Henry Sharpnack; and 2. the eight grandchildren of Elizabeth Sharpnack Hergesheimer.⁴ Stook contested the estate, which led to “Stook’s Appeal,” a lawsuit ultimately adjudicated by the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania and published afterward in 1853.

Despite “Stook’s Appeal,” it appears that Sharpnack Street was opened in 1849, as it is referenced in a real estate advertisement for the Sharpnack House the next year.⁵ The development of the street was also reported on by the Germantown Telegraph in December 1851, which included a notice that houses were to be constructed.⁶ The subject property was part of a larger parcel that was first sold by John Leibert, the executor of the Estate of Benjamin Sharpnack, to Henry Fricke, a merchant of Northern Liberties. It was during Fricke’s ownership that eight lots were created on the southeast side of the newly opened street. In 1853, Henry and Elizabeth Fricke deeded the subject property to John Hergesheimer and Joseph Silvius, both house carpenters of Germantown, which led to the development of the subject property.⁷ On June 13, 1856, John Hergesheimer deeded the subject property with the subject house, newly completed, to Joseph Silvius for $1,850.⁸ The subject property was later sold to Benjamin L. Langstroth, a gentleman, for $3,000.⁹ Langstroth held the property until July 31, 1866, when he sold it to Solon Brownwell, an engineer formerly of Iowa, recently having relocated to Philadelphia, for $3,000.¹⁰ Brownwell then subdivided the property into two lots, creating the subject property in its present form. In 1868, Brownwell sold the subject property to Job Bird, a merchant of Germantown, who then flipped the property to Rachel Stewart, the wife of Henry R. Stewart, of Germantown for $3,500.¹¹ Rachel Stewart resided in the subject house until her death on February 15, 1898, after which time Robert Thomas, Executor of the Estate of Rachel Stewart, sold the subject property to John Clark, a blacksmith of Germantown, which was effective on April 27, 1899.¹²

BIOGRAPHY OF HARRIET “HATTIE” HILL HUCKABEE

Harriet “Hattie” Hill Huckabee was born on August 10, ca.1867-70, in Greensboro, Hale County, Alabama, the daughter of Homer Hill (1845-1914) and Mildred “Milly” Edmonia Watt (1845-1928).¹⁴ Homer Hill was a farmer, and the son of Fabius Fenelon Hill (1817-1885), a plantation owner and enslaver, and Harriet Hamilton (1828-1911), who was possibly an enslaved African American woman. According to Rebecca Motley, M.D., the Hill family historian and a great-great niece of Hattie Hill Huckabee, it appears that Fabius Fenelon Hill was in favor of educating his children, despite their social status in society as being of a mixed racial background. This led to a legacy of education in the Hill family. It appears that Homer and Milly Hill had approximately twelve children, many of whom were educated, becoming educators themselves.¹⁵ Milly Watt Hill was the daughter of Captain Hugh Washington Watt, V (1813-1872), and a Cajun woman from Louisiana, which led to a similar family of mixed racial background.¹⁶

When the time came, Hattie attended the Tullibody Academy in Greensboro, known as one of the first and “better Negro schools” in the rural district near the farm upon which she was raised.¹⁷ Tullibody was significant, as it was established in a “brush arbor” on or near the McFadden Plantation in ca.1870 by William Burns Paterson, a pioneer and apostle in “Negro Education in Alabama.”¹⁸ Hattie went on to attend the State Normal School for Colored Students in Montgomery, Alabama, from which she graduated in 1893.¹⁹ The State Normal School ultimately became Alabama State University, one of America’s Historically Black Colleges. She would later attend the Summer Normal School for Teachers in 1912, 1913, and 1914 at Hampton Institute, Virginia.²⁰ Immediately after graduation, Hattie’s initial teaching position was at her first school: the Tullibody Academy.²¹

Hattie married Benjamin E. Huckabee, M. D. (Dr. Huckabee), an important African American educator and physician, also from Greensboro, on November 16, 1886.²² Dr. Huckabee was a “teacher of the Colored Public School” with roughly 70 students when he and Hattie were married.²³ He was also prominent in the African American community’s Republican Party.²⁴ By 1889, he was principal of the “Colored Public School” at Greensboro, which was still referred to as the Tullibody Academy in the 1890s.²⁵ The Huckabees raised the following children: Willie C. Huckabee (1898-1910); Robert Huckabee (b.1911); Dempsey Butler Huckabee (1911-1967); and Zakra Huckabee (b.1916).²⁶ Dr. Huckabee’s father, Edward Huckabee had been enslaved by Robert Huckabee in Greene County, Alabama, and, during the Civil War, Ed Huckabee accompanied his

After Dr. Huckabee shifted from education to the practice of medicine between 1904 and 1906, the family moved to Birmingham, Jefferson County, Alabama, where Hattie became a teacher at an African American school at both Fossil’s Graded School and Rosedale. She was not only an educator for the Jefferson County Schools, she owned her own home in Birmingham.²⁸ By July 1910, Dr. Huckabee was a co-founder and 1st Vice President of the Prudential Savings Bank in Birmingham, which was advertised as “The First Negro Bank to Begin Business With a Paid-in Capital of $25,000.00.”²⁹ He continued as 1st Vice President through the mid-1910s.³⁰ This position demonstrates the prominence of the Huckabee family during the early twentieth century.

In 1914, Hattie was appointed a Supervising Industrial Teacher or a Jeanes Supervisor for “64 Negro Schools,” which was a new “Programme For Negro Teachers,” serving Jefferson County.³¹ Mrs. J. B. Reid reported in The Age-Herald on this “Industrial Work,” including a quote from Hattie Hill Huckabee:

My first year’s work as superintendent of the industrial training of our people is now closing. I have supervised 64 schools. I began work on November 2. Until then I had only taught at Rosedale and Fossill. Now, however, I have learned a valuable lesson from this opportunity.

This has been a hard year, and our people have suffered. I have devoted much time in needy communities teaching how to use a little in a great many ways. There have been placed five sewing machines and three cook stoves into schools this term. In schools around mining camps we have borrowed kitchens, and the girls have been taught to sew, cook and clean house. This is a means of fitting our young for better service and I trust for the continued help from the teachers of the Jefferson County colored schools.³²

It was at this time that Hattie’s career shifted from educating students in the classroom to looking at the bigger picture of education in terms of industrial and vocational training in Jefferson County. This position was subsidized by the Jeanes Fund, which was created by Anna T. Jeanes (1822-1907), a Quaker philanthropist from Philadelphia.³³ The Jeanes Supervisors were a contingency of Black teachers who worked in African American schools throughout the American South between 1908 and 1968. This program had a major impact on the quality of education for African Americans.³⁴ Active in many organizations, Hattie was elected Vice President of the Negro State Teachers’ Association in April 1920.³⁵ Throughout the Huckabees’ time in Birmingham, Hattie was active in a Presbyterian congregation, and regularly attended church functions.³⁶

It appears that the Huckabees first moved to Philadelphia in 1921, when they purchase the subject property from the Estate of John Clark, a blacksmith.³⁷ Hattie Hill Huckabee was soon installed in the prominent African American social circles of Philadelphia. In 1929, Hattie Hill Huckabee established the Women’s Civic and Welfare Club of the 22nd Ward, Germantown, which was one of the important civic, community, and social organizations for African American women in East Mt. Airy and the larger realm of Germantown. Naturally, she served as president of the organization from the time of its founding until her death in 1932. The advent of this organization was timely, providing a local response to the Crash of 1929, when the need for charity and community service was in great demand. When the club celebrated its first anniversary in October 1930, the organization boasted over 200 active members with branches in other parts of Philadelphia. According to the Philadelphia Tribune, the purpose of the Women’s Civic and Welfare Club was “Charity work among the poor colored families in this vicinity.”³⁸ Hattie was an active member of the Women’s Republican Club of the Twenty-Second Ward as well, serving as treasurer by 1929.³⁹

During her tenure as president, the Women’s Civic and Welfare Club opened a Community Kitchen at 36 E. Sharpnack Street, where Hattie and her fellow club members served “meals to the unemployed families, colored and white, of this section of the city.” As president of a relatively new organization, she was literally in the kitchen with her fellow clubwomen, preparing the meals. In a nine-week period, the organization served over 3,700 meals.⁴⁰ The Philadelphia Tribune reported on the “W. C. and W. Club Meeting” in February 1932, presided over by Hattie Hill Huckabee. At that time, it was stated the club had grown significantly to more than 500 members.⁴¹

In 1931, the Men’s Civic and Welfare Club of Germantown and the 22nd Ward, a partner club, was established “at the home of Mrs. Hattie Huckabee, of 106 E. Sharpnack street,” for the purpose of conducting “social, political and educational work among the colored people” of the community.⁴²

During this period, the property at 106 E. Sharpnack Street must have been a hive of activity. The 1930 census lists as residents of the property: Dr. and Hattie Huckabee, their adopted children (Dempsey B. Huckabee, Robert Huckabee, and Zacra C. Huckabee) as well as two boarders and five roomers.⁴³

HISTORIC CONTEXT: DOUGLAS POLITICAL CLUB

The Douglas Political Club of the 22nd Ward, Germantown, was founded in ca.1931-32, as “one of the largest organizations of political workers in Philadelphia.” When the organization purchased the subject building in 1941, Catherine Taylor of the Philadelphia Tribune reported that “a group of hard working men of Germantown met one evening in 1931 and formed themselves into a club known as the Douglass Political Club.”⁴⁷ Attorney Holland is said to have been instrumental in starting the organization.⁴⁸ In its earliest years, the organization met at the Young Women’s Christian Association at 6128 Germantown Avenue. In February 1932, the officers included R. L. Myers, president; Smith Pierce, vice-president; R. L. Pierce, secretary; G. R. Peck, assistant secretary; Henry Bynum, assistant secretary; Benjamin E. Stickney, treasurer; Anthony James, chaplain; Wilbert R. Dixon, sergeant-at-arms.⁴⁹ The organization held its first “mass meeting” at the Janes Methodist Episcopal Church, Haines Street east of Germantown Avenue, on a Friday evening in March 1932. The speaker of the evening was Hattie Hill Huckabee, who then occupied the subject building as her residence, which would eventually become the organization’s clubhouse. She spoke of “Cooperation” and the life of Frederick Douglas.⁵⁰

By April 1932, the organization reported 275 members from the local community. At their meeting that month, the club hosted Councilman-elect Edwin Emhardt as their speaker. The organization had a clubhouse at 80 E. Sharpnack Street by January 1935, at which time new officers were elected: Clifford W. Thorton, president; Thomas Harris, vice president; Lawrence Pollard, recording secretary; Alexander Washington, assistant recording secretary; Joseph Colver, financial secretary; William McCallum, assistant financial secretary; Benjamin Stickney, treasurer; Frank Fuller, chaplain; and Daniel Williams, sergeant-at-arms.⁵¹ Over the years the organization celebrated the birthday of their namesake, Frederick Douglas. In February 1937, the fourth Douglas celebration took place in their clubhouse at 80 E. Sharpnack Street. The officers at that time included Clifford W. Thorton, president; Lawrence Pollard, recording secretary; Joseph Colver, financial secretary; and Benjamin E. Stickney, treasurer. The event was reported on in the Philadelphia Tribune by Miss Loerna Branch, who lived at 68 E. Sharpnack Street.⁵²

In November 1941, the subject building was purchased from the Huckabee family. By January 1942, “all modern improvements, including recreational facilities” were made by the club members. The new building was opened for use by the Douglas Political Club under the leadership of Lawrence Pollard, president; Robert Burgess, vice president; Robert Holton, financial secretary; Harry Poindexter, treasurer; Phillip Smith, chaplain; Lewis Patterson, recording secretary; Samuel Arnold, assistant financial secretary; and Larry Riley, recording secretary. Abe Price, the oldest member of the club, installed the officers.⁵³

From the time of its founding and into the period of its longtime clubhouse, the Douglas Political Club served as a multi-faceted community organization for Black men of all classes in East Mt. Airy and the larger area known as Germantown. The organization was involved in cultural, patriotic, political, and social engagements and matters, serving not just as a political club, but as a civic organization. The nomination examines the first thirty years of the organization's history, though it continues to the present day in 2024. By 1958, after more than twenty-five years, when discussing issues related to the youth of the community, the Philadelphia Tribune characterized the Douglas Political Club as having a "towering stature as a leader" in the neighborhood.⁵⁵ The need for such an organization is shown in its immediate ascension to a place of importance and respect, being represented at local events and meetings in its earliest years.⁵⁶ The organization participated in Memorial Day ceremonies with other local organizations, as well as cross-cultural events, socio-economic discussions and labors, etc.⁵⁷ The Association of Chartered Clubs of Philadelphia was founded in the subject building in December 1957.⁵⁸ While some activities were philosophical and highly political, the daily efforts of the organization were very much community-based, providing entertainment and various forms of intellectual and physical nourishment. In time, the organization regularly sponsored camping excursions for youth, including sending children to Camp University, Pennsylvania.⁵⁹ By the early 1950s, the clubhouse was home to the organization's annual Christmas party, which included over 100 children in 1953. The Philadelphia Tribune reported, that the "children enjoyed an afternoon of movies, games, and contests with delicious refreshments."⁶⁰ In 1959 and 1961, the event included more than 300 children.⁶¹ In the 1950s, the organization began hosting an annual charity fashion show at the subject property.⁶² Many events at the Douglas Political Club were hosted and organized by their Ladies Auxiliary, which was active for many years.⁶³ The Civic Committee of the Douglas Political Club was charged with conducting community work over the years.⁶⁴ Additionally, the subject building was also a social hall for the community.⁶⁵

While less active in more recent years, the Douglas Political Club was an important community organization that occupied the subject building from 1942 to the present, representing the cultural, economic, political, social, and historical heritage of the community, satisfying Criteria A and J.

CONCLUSION

The spirit of civic duty and community betterment in the African American community pervades this historic resource, starting with the legacy of Hattie Hill Huckabee and carried forward by the Douglas Political Club. The subject building represents both the development of civic life by a single individual and the decades of organizational service that followed, satisfying Criteria A and J.
