AFFIDAVIT OF NON-RENTAL INFORMATION

If you are the owner of a property in Philadelphia which is currently being occupied by relatives but you are not collecting rent or other monetary compensation you may submit an affidavit of non-rental.

The affidavit of non-rental is a sworn affidavit meaning that any statements made within are subject to the penalties of perjury. It must be notarized before it will be accepted by the Department of Licenses and Inspections.

Section 9-3902 of the Philadelphia Code requires that any person offering for rent a dwelling unit, multiple family dwelling, rooming house, dormitory, hotel, or a rooming unit therein must obtain a commercial activity license and a rental license from the Department of Licenses and Inspections. You are not entitled to collect rent without a rental license.

Any person found to be in violation of any section of the rental license requirement is subject to a fine of three-hundred dollars ($300) per day for as long as the violation(s) continues.

Please be aware that, no complaint for eviction may be filed without producing documentation of a commercial activity license and a rental license.

Once you have filed an affidavit of non-rental, you must contact the Department within ten (10) business days to notify them of any changes in contact information, occupancy, and/or monetary arrangements and obtain the proper license(s) if necessary.

If you have filed an affidavit of non-rental and receive a Notice of Violation from the Department stating that you need to obtain a rental license read the notice carefully and follow the instructions contained therein.

If you have questions regarding the legal implications of filing an affidavit of non-rental with regard to any property rights or potential penalties, please consult with an attorney.
